

40 Questions to Ask in Networking Interviews

Most job hunters realize how critical networking is and work hard to arrange face-to-face meetings with contacts. The first step of networking is drafting a list of your all the friends, professional acquaintances and corporate bigwigs you know. The next step is knowing what to say and making contact. Be cognisant of a contact's time and prepare an agenda before each meeting. Decide what information you are looking for and how you should word your questions to elicit that information. To simplify your writing process, review the following list of questions. Pick those that are most appropriate, then tailor them to fit your personal situation and speaking style. Formulate some of your own as well, but don't try to squeeze in too many questions into one meeting.
